8 Leadership Styles That Don't Work

A RESOURCE BY DR. FRANK DAMAZIO

Introduction

There are as many approaches to leadership as there are leaders. Our standard is different than a secular leader. A leadership style is a choice, a learned behavior. There are some leadership styles that are anything but models of good leadership. Spiritual leadership is a blending of natural and spiritual qualities utilized for influencing God's people to accomplish God's purposes. A leadership style can be a great asset to you or a great detriment.

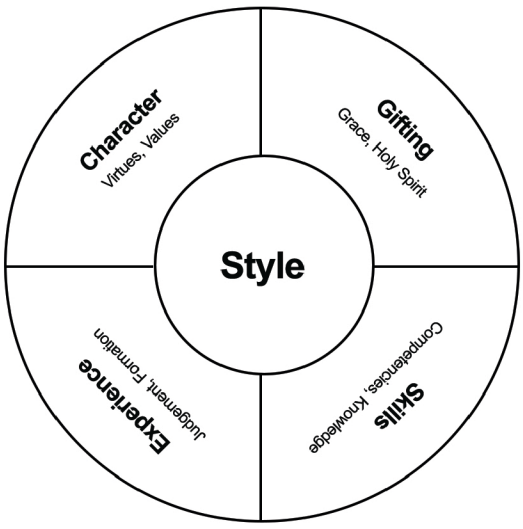

In this teaching, I am examining 8 Leadership Styles That Don't Work. Sometimes it's good to see what not to do and learn from our mistakes. Leadership is the process of motivating a group of people to act toward accomplishing a task. There are a number of recognized versions or styles of leadership, some of which have been shown to be more effective than others.

Leadership Style Matters

A good leadership style ideally is one who shapes the individuals around them—those you lead, serve, and help—in a nurturing climate that helps them to grow, excel, and strive for excellence.

A bad leadership style is one who does more harm than good, stunts people's growth, limits others potentials, behaves in a condescending way, and shuts people down—embarrassing them, humiliating them, and seeing people as disposable investments. They think what I have defines who I am, what I achieve reflects on who I am, what others think about me defines who I am.
